Fact Sheet Nine:
What is Self-Care?

"Self-care" can be understood in many different ways. In its simplest form, the term refers to our ability as human beings to function effectively in the world while meeting the multiple challenges of daily life with a sense of energy, vitality, and confidence. Self-care is initiated and maintained by us as individuals, it requires our active engagement.

The term "self-care" spans a full range of issues: physical, emotional, intellectual, and spiritual. Some conceptualise this construct by considering the dimensions of mind, body, and spirit, or in terms of thinking, feeling, and behaving. It is referred to as "wellness", a "healthy balance", "resilience", and simply, mental health. It is important to note, though, that no matter how one breaks down the dimensions of self-care, in the end, all of these different aspects are interconnected. Failure to take care of oneself in one realm can lead to consequences in another.

There is no formula for self-care. Each "self-care plan" will be unique and change over time. Ultimately, we must listen well to our own bodies, hearts, and minds, as well as to the voices and messages from trusted friends, as we seek resiliency and renewal in our lives and work.

To better understand what self-care is, here are three things it is not:

Self-care is not an "emergency response plan" to be activated when stress becomes overwhelming. Instead, healthy self-care is an intentional way of living by which our values, attitudes, and actions are integrated into our day-to-day routines. The need for "emergency care" should be an exception to usual practice.

Self-care is not about acting selfishly. Instead, healthy self-care is about being a worthy steward of the self – body, mind, and spirit – with which we've been entrusted. It is foolhardy to think we can be providers of care to others without being the recipients of proper nurture and sustenance ourselves.

Self-care is not about doing more, or adding more tasks to an already overflowing "to do" list. Instead, healthy self-care is as much about "letting go" as it is about taking action. It has to do with taking time to be a human being as well as a human doing. It is about letting go of frenzied schedules, meaningless activities, unhealthy behaviours, and detrimental attitudes such as worry, guilt, and being judgmental.
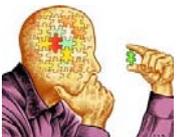

Reflective Practice
What are some of the self care practices that you currently do? Complete the Self Care Assessment Tool to help you identify self care strategies in the areas of physical, psychological, emotional, spiritual and professional that you may want to implement.